

Dear Glenn,

We hope you are doing well this year and enjoying the New Year with your children. All is well up here in Cincinnati. It is hard to believe that we have a son in school now, but he loves it and has just learned to read. What a blessing to own the Bible In Stories and have him reading to us too.

It was one year ago that I met with you and Haro Setian in the Bob Jones University snack shop. We were just excited to be able to see you guys. Who knew that we would talk shop, and that I would walk away with the Bible In Stories. I was convinced as soon as you walked me through the books, and for once in my life, there was no buyer's remorse.

How could my family not love the books? With two children almost 4 and 6 years old, devotions are an important part of each night. For years we read from different "Bible story books," but I wanted to be reading the Bible to the kids and have them understanding what we were reading. As an English teacher and Reading specialist, I am a tough critic of any reading materials that come into our house. I have not been disappointed!!!

My children love sitting down for devotions, and I feel they are being challenged to listen and learn. They argue over who gets to answer the questions at the end of each story, and I know that they are listening so they can answer correctly. We love that songs are interspersed throughout the volumes, and we have used those songs to finish our reading each night. And the pictures – they are so realistic. Even before my son could read, we knew that what he didn't understand through words would be made up for in pictures.

I am excited to use these volumes for many years to come. There will come a day when my daughter wants to accept the Lord as her brother has already done. And I know that I can show her clearly through God's Word, but also through the first story in each volume that shares how one can know for sure that he is going to Heaven. And as my children grow, they will be able to grasp deeper concepts as detailed in the "themes" at the start of each story.

Thank you for making the Bible In Stories, and getting the word out that the Bible is available for children – without all the fluff. We have had numerous family members and friends to our home for overnight visits, and they sit through devotions impressed with what our children are learning, not to mention how beautifully the books are presented.

Sincerely,
Megan and Jason Fuller
